

Finally the Occupy movement has emerged to shine a spotlight on what we've all known: it's time to deal with runaway inequality and the influence of powerful vested interests in politics.

What if we were all ready to treat the next crisis as an opportunity to build support for progressive policies? Wouldn't it be great if grassroots movements like Occupy were armed with a coherent and transformative policy agenda to deal with the root causes of the problems they highlight?

That's where the work of the Centre for Policy Development comes in. We translate the desire for a fair, sustainable and democratic society into well-researched, viable ideas for change.
